HOME SERVICE.

Every now and then we hear of some real good that has come out of the war. Medical and surgical advances have been remarkable. The art of flying and the development of the aeroplane are scores of years ahead of where they would have been had there been no war. Scientific discoveries and inventions have been multiplied by the needs of warfare. The world is taking a new view of itself and its responsibilities.

In our little community we have seen nothing of the big discoveries and inventions, but, as a result of the war we are developing through the Home Service section of the Red Cross, a social service activity of real value, which should not be allowed to end with the ending of the Red Cross war work.

Originally designed to help the families of men who were serving in the army or navy, the Home Service section has been of great value to the discharged soldiers on their return to civil life. It has taken up the anti-tuberculosis work suggested for draftees, discharged because of their tendencies to this disease. Slowly its work has broadened until many in civil life, who had no direct connection with the war, have been reached and benefited by it, and as the war gets further into the past its greatest work will be of this nature.

The Red Cross began in an effort to alleviate human suffering. It has found a place in every American community because of the war. Every American community should see that its work continues after the war because the peace time opportunity for service will be almost as great as it was during the war.

In connection with the work in Bend it is fitting that recognition be given to the whole hearted, conscientious and sympathetic service given by the secretary of the Home Service section here. Mrs. Forbes' success with the work has shown what can be done and therefore the importance of continuing with it.

The chap in Seattle who is ready to give a hat to the one who will prove to him that Bend has not a population of 10,000 will have an opportunity to buy a hat or say, "I told you so," when the Elks finish their census.

Mom who takes care of everyone else has no time for herself

Dear Abby: I am a stay-at-home mom to three wonderful little girls. I appreciate my husband working so I can do this, but I'm very lonely. I have no real friends.
I help my mom with all her medical needs, making appointments and getting her to them. I also help my brother with his three kids. I help everyone with everything.
In addition to running my home and taking care of our three children, I do everything for my husband. All he has to do when he comes home from work is eat and take a shower.

I haven't been anywhere by myself in a long time. We haven't had a date night, either. Finding a baby sitter isn't easy. Mom can't watch the kids, and my grandparents do it only when I need to take her to the doctor's without the baby. I take the baby everywhere with me.
Please give me some advice on making time for myself and my marriage. I just need someone to be on MY side.

—Loneliest Mom in Illinois
Dear Mom: I'm on your side. You have been so helpful to everyone else that you have forgotten how to take care of yourself. Tell your husband what you need — a date night with him every two weeks and a day or two to take care of yourself each month. It will do wonders for your spirits. When you do, ask your brother to watch your children for you. If he refuses, hiring someone to baby-sit would be money well spent.
The problem with being a martyr is that people die doing it, so recognize it's time to stand up for yourself. Nobody will do it for you.

Dear Abby: My father was married before he met my mother and had five wonderful children during his previous marriage. When my half-brother got married two years ago, he invited our father, my mother and me to his wedding. My parents declined because they didn't want to see my father's ex-wife (my half-brother's mother). I went because, quite frankly, I have no dog in that fight.
I recently got word that my half-sister is getting married in June and plans on inviting our father and my mother. Due to their absence at my half-brother's wedding, my parents have decided they shouldn't go to any of my half-siblings' weddings to be fair to everyone.

Although I'm upset they're refusing to attend, I can't help but wonder what I should do when I get married. Because they're my parents and I love them, I'd like them to come. But I also want to be sensitive to my half-siblings' thoughts and feelings. What should I do?
—Troubled in Kentucky

Dear Troubled: When the time comes, talk to your half-siblings about your concerns and the fact that your parents did not come to their weddings. Explain that they were absent because they were uncomfortable about encountering their mother. I'm sure it won't surprise them. Tell them you would love to have them with you on that special day. But if they refuse out of loyalty to their mother, do not regard it as a personal rejection.
—Write to Dear Abby at dearabby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069
